Broncos Win Super Bowl 50 as Defense Swarms Panthers New York Times

An anticipated showdown between an old-style quarterback and his new-age counterpart - not to mention two top-seeded teams - degenerated into a morass of poor throws, dropped passes and horrible pass protection, with a combined six turnovers and 18 penalties. This 50th edition of the Super Bowl was meant to be entertaining, even historic. But perhaps the moment was too pregnant for the Denver Broncos, led by Peyton Manning in the twilight of his famed career, and the upstart, favored Carolina Panthers, represented in every way by their pioneering quarterback, Cam Newton.

Von Miller, defense carry Broncos to Super Bowl 50 victory Denver Post

For all the importance of Peyton Manning's likely final game, it was Miller and the Orange Rush that thrust the Broncos to a championship, smothering Carolina 24-10 in Super Bowl 50 Sunday.

Colorado group wants ballot measure to make it harder to change state constitution

Colorado Springs Gazette

Civic leaders trying to make it harder to amend the Colorado Constitution will ask voters in November to require future petition signatures be gathered in each of the state's 35 Senate districts and that at least 55 percent of voters approve the initiative when it appears on the ballot.

"Our constitution has become a special-interest playground because the bar to amend it is so spectacularly, inexplicably, unthinkingly low," said former state Sen. Greg Brophy, R-Wray, who is backing the five initiative petitions submitted Tuesday to Colorado Legislative Council Staff. "Amending the state constitution should take more than a couple big dollar donors, a signature collection crew on Denver's 16th Street and Boulders Pearl Street malls, and a big idea that sounds good on a bumper sticker."

House advances bill giving parents time off for school meetings

Chalkbeat Colorado

The Colorado House gave preliminary approval Wednesday to a contentious bill intended to give parents the legal right to time off from work for parent-teacher conferences and a limited number of other school meetings.

The 50-minute debate over the bill was as much political theater as it was a policy discussion, with a strong undercurrent of Democratic-Republican differences about economic opportunity and business regulation, not about education.

As they stood in line waiting to go into the classroom after lunch, Jackson wondered aloud, "How do you pronounce that in Spanish," the 6-year-old said to classmate Alexa, as he pointed up at an 'EXIT' sign.

"Salida," she quickly responded.

Esgar: "Revenue is the only problem" on transportation money

Denver Post

Last week, Rep. Clarice Navarro of Pueblo laid out a Republican argument on funding state transportation, saying better priorities, not new revenue, provide the road to solving the problems.

This week Democratic Rep. Daneya Esgar of Pueblo offered a Democratic response: Revenue is the obstacle, as transportation falls far behind the pace of growth.

A bill requiring adequate tires or chains in bad weather cleared Colorado's House of Representatives on Tuesday and is headed for the state Senate.

Her bill is designed to reduce road closures and delays on the mountain corridor of Interstate 70. Mitsch Bush represents Eagle and Routt counties in Colorado's House of Representatives.

Senate Approves Bill Directing More Car Tax Revenue to Roads

Colorado Senate Republicans

Most Coloradans pay their hefty vehicle registration fees assuming they'll go to road improvements, even though millions are diverted annually to fund politically-favored transit projects that should be a lesser priority given our deteriorating road conditions.

In a bid to correct this case of misplaced priorities, Senate Republicans today won passage of SB-11, which redirects to road safety $15 million in FASTER funds currently earmarked for transit.

GOP measure to boost road money threatens Bustang, transit projects

Denver Post

The Republican-led state Senate gave initial approval Tuesday to a bill that would send an additional $15 million to road building projects but cut money for mass transit options, such as the new Bustang service.

The measure is part of a long-running effort by Republicans to rewrite a 2009 law authored by Democrats and showcases the ideological divide this session about how to address the state's transportation needs.
