Go Behind The Scenes Where Ballots Are Counted CBS Denver

Colorado's Department of Revenue admits it incorrectly sent 7,700 Colorado taxpayers letters last week denying them their TABOR refund or incorrectly computing their tax refund. "The Department of Revenue apologizes for any inconvenience this may have caused." wrote Dept. of Revenue Communications Director Lynn Granger.

Denver poll workers get active shooter training ahead of general election Colorado News

For the first time ever, Denver's 350 election judges will have to complete training to teach them how to respond to an active shooter. The training happens to coincide with one of the most contentious campaign seasons.

The online course teaches anyone faced with the worst-case scenario... to run, hide and if you have to... fight.

CBS4 Investigation Finds People Voting Twice

CBS Denver

An ongoing CBS4 voter fraud investigation has uncovered a dozen cases where Coloradans are suspected of voting twice. Previous CBS4 Investigations revealed ballots cast in the names of Coloradans who had been dead for months- sometimes years- before votes were cast in their names.

In six of the new cases, voting records show the same people voting twice in Colorado elections. In another six cases, people are suspected of voting in Colorado and another state during the same election cycle.

Colorado Has Highest Percentage Of Registered Voters In U.S.

CBS Denver

A day after the most watched presidential debate in history, Colorado is marking National Voter Registration Day on September 27th.

Eighty-seven percent of voters in Colorado are registered to vote, which is the highest percentage of any state in the country.

What's at stake in Colorado's statehouse races

Denver Business Journal

Forget the presidential and U.S. Senate races. The battle for control of the state Senate could be far more important for Colorado business on issues like roads, construction and energy.

State battles are hot; election isn't just about White House Colorado Statesman

Years of losses have left Democrats at historic lows in state legislatures. But now they're seeking to wrest control of as many as a dozen chambers from Republicans, a key step in gaining more influence in redistricting.

The battle for statehouse control is playing out in more than half the states with tens of millions of dollars of planned political spending before the Nov. 8 general election. Democrats are hoping the turmoil surrounding Donald Trump's presidential campaign can boost their fortunes in down-ballot races, although Hillary Clinton remains unpopular in many Republican-leaning regions.

John Elway's TV ads begin on three Colorado ballot initiatives Colorado Springs Gazette

John Elway is taking snaps on three Colorado ballot initiatives with two TV ads that will begin appearing across the state Sunday.

Elway supports Amendment 71, which would make it harder to amend the Colorado Constitution via future ballot initiatives. He opposes Amendment 69 to create a single-payer health care system, called ColoradoCare, and Amendment 70 to raise the state's minimum wage from $8.31 per hour to $12 per hour by 2020.

Election 2016 - Colorado Senate District 8 heats up Craig Daily Press

With Colorado Republicans holding onto a majority by just one seat, the results of this year's senatorial elections has the potential to shift the balance of power in the Colorado General Assembly.

In District 8, it's a familiar matchup as Democrat Emily Tracy returns to run against incumbent Republican Sen. Randy Baumgardner, who defeated Tracy in 2012 with 51.1 percent of the vote.

Ellen Roberts resigns from state Senate Durango Herald

Republican state Sen. Ellen Roberts of Durango announced October 16th that she is resigning to focus more on family and her private law practice.

Her move is likely to set into motion shifts within the district, as Republican Rep. Don Coram of Montrose has expressed interest in moving up to the position. Coram's move to the Senate District 6 seat would also leave a vacancy in House District 58, where he currently serves.

Coram eyes Roberts' Senate Seat Grand Junction Daily Sentinel

State Sen. Ellen Roberts, a Durango Republican, has announced that she will resign from her southwest Colorado district seat at the end of this year.

That decision leaves open an opportunity for local state Rep. Don Coram, R-Montrose, to move into the Colorado Senate, something he said he planned to seek when a vacancy committee is formed early next year.

New top aide has worked for Gov. John Hickenlooper, Hillary Clinton's campaign in Colorado Denver Post

Denver Mayor Michael Hancock on Wednesday appointed Alan Salazar, a longtime Democratic political strategist, as his new chief of staff.

Salazar will become the mayor's second chief aide after working this summer and fall as a senior adviser for presidential candidate Hillary Clinton's Colorado campaign, focusing in part on appealing to Latino voters. He had taken a leave of absence in June from Gov. John Hickenlooper's office, where he served as chief policy officer and strategist.

Backers of failed anti-oil-and-gas initiatives decide against challenge Denver Business Journal

Supporters of two initiatives that would have tightened regulation of oil and gas operations in Colorado said September 28th they will not challenge the decision by state officials that not enough valid petition signatures were gathered to place the measures on the state's fall ballot.

Instead, a group that backed those measures said it will now direct its efforts toward defeating Amendment 71, a measure that did make the ballot which would tighten rules for amending the state constitution.

Colorado won't bolt from PARCC just yet, state board chairman says Chalkbeat Colorado

The chairman of the State Board of Education said October 12th that Colorado is likely to stick with its current math and English tests for at least the next two school years, after earlier suggesting that the state consider moving in another direction immediately. Republican Steve Durham of Colorado Springs, however, made clear that the board eventually wants to discuss abandoning PARCC, a multi-state testing group that has already lost a majority of its founding members.

"Immediate change is very difficult and probably impractical," Durham told Chalkbeat after a lengthy board discussion about the state's future involvement with PARCC. "After 2018, it's appropriate to look at all of our options."

GRANTHAM: Legislature plays role in affordable housing Pueblo Chieftan

Not a week goes by that Colorado's affordable housing crunch isn't in the news. Yet almost all the remedies proposed in response, typified by Denver's recent imposition of an "affordable housing tax" on builders and homeowners, are only designed to mask the symptoms, not address the underlying causes. That's why the problem persists despite decades of similarly-flawed fixes.

Here are the top Colorado legislative races to watch in 2016 Denver Post

Control of the Colorado General Assembly is one of the highest-stakes questions that will be settled by the 2016 ballot.

Republicans now have an 18-17 edge in the Senate, and Democrats would have to hold on to a couple of key seats in tight districts while flipping at least one seat from GOP control. To break the Democrats' 34-31 majority in the House, Republicans would have to win two Democratic seats for the majority while also beating back challenges to some of its own endangered incumbents.
