The battle over the state budget

9 News

Colorado lawmakers are nearing approval of the state budget. Democratic State Representative Millie Hamner and Republican State Senator Kevin Grantham, both members of the Joint Budget committee, joined Marshall Zelinger on last week's Politics Unplugged to discuss how the budget is created, the tough choices involved and the status of where this year's budget stands.

EDITORIAL: It's not your grandpa's GOP thanks to a Colorado

transformation

The Gazette

It happened again. An underdog tapped the emotions of fed-up Republicans, tired of business as usual, and defied the widely assumed outcome of a major political event. Upsets seldom get bigger than this.

The Republican Party is getting a political blood transfusion. For Democrats, this may not be good news.

Colorado's GOP transformation progressed Saturday with the convention election of El Paso County Commissioner Darryl Glenn to run in the Republican primary of the United States Senate. He won with 2,664 votes. Tim Neville, the presumed front-runner going in, garnered only 696 votes. Commissioner Peg Littleton came in third with 218. Tallies for four other candidates went down from there.

Colorado House kills bill to increase local authority over oil and gas drilling

Denver Business Journal

Gov. John Hickenlooper expressed frustration last week with legislation from his fellow Democrats to change oil and gas regulations before the Colorado Supreme Court has made any decisions regarding local fracking bans and before the work of a task force on the subject has been completed.

On Monday, a pair of Democrats in the Legislature gave him a hand, joining with House Republicans to kill a measure that intended to lay out the authority of local governments over oil and gas drilling operations.

An amendment by Rep. Tracy Kraft-Tharp, D-Arvada, first watered down House Bill 1355, sponsored by Democratic Reps. Mike Foote of Lafayette and Su Ryden of Aurora. In the form that it passed out of committee last month, the bill granted cities and counties new powers to limit the location of drilling rigs through zoning.

Crowder wants to be really clear about how he sees the hospital provider fee, you follow?

Colorado Statesman

"The thing I'm trying to impress on people is we got to come out and have to have an adult conversation in this state about what direction we want to go," said state Sen. Larry Crowder, standing on the steps of the Capitol last week.

Crowder was talking about his support for House Bill 1420, which would reclassify Colorado's hospital provider fee in order to make room in the state general fund for additional hundreds of millions of dollars below the state spending cap put in place by the Taxpayer Bill of Rights. Crowder, a Republican from southeast high plains Alamosa, has got himself in the middle of a fracas.

Charter School Advocates Back Bill To Equalize Funding

Colorado Public Radio

A big battle over school funding is brewing at the state Capitol over a proposed bill that would require school districts to share local property tax dollars with charter schools. Those are public schools with freedom from some of the regulations imposed on district-run schools. Charter schools educate about eight percent of the state's 850,000 students. On average, Colorado's district-run schools receive about 20 percent more funding than independently-run charter schools. That's because school districts are not required to give charters a share of local property tax revenue.

"This idea of some of our students 'have' and some 'have not' is wrong," said Republican state Sen. Owen Hill Thursday. "It's wrong for our constitution and we're going to fix this."

Letter from Lt. Governor Garcia announcing Jennifer Sobanet transition from Colorado Dept. of Higher Ed

Colleagues;

It is with a mixture of regret and congratulations for a job well done that I announce that Jennifer Sobanet, the Chief of Operations for the Colorado Department of Higher Education, has accepted the position of Vice Chancellor for Finance and CFO at the University of Colorado-Denver. Jennifer has previously held executive positions at Front Range Community College, Colorado State University Global Campus, and the Colorado Community College System, among others, and she brought that incredible experience to the Department at a time when we were facing a number of challenges. Along with that experience, she brought great management and leadership skills, a commitment to team building and professional development, a passion for the work of the Department and the Commission, and, most importantly, a personal warmth that will be irreplaceable.

Jennifer has led our HB-1319 efforts to create a new system to allocate higher education funding that recognizes and rewards student success, the effort to improve History Colorado's financial and management status, our Attainment Gap and Collective Impact initiative to increase credential attainment for under-represented students, our shared efforts to achieve the ambitious goals of our Master Plan, and the restructuring of our divisions and the professional development of our employees. I cannot thank her enough for the work she has done that made it possible for me to serve in the dual role of Lt. Governor and Executive Director of DHE. Without her support and active leadership, we could not have made the progress we have made and achieved the level of national recognition for our efforts that we have seen in recent years.

Jennifer will be with us through the end of May and she will help to support the transition to new leadership at the Department. While her loss is significant, I have great faith in our staff, our senior leadership team, and our Commissioners, and I know the good work of the Department will continue uninterrupted. Please join me in congratulating Jennifer on her next step and please continue to work towards our shared goals of insuring that all Coloradans have access to high quality, affordable and accessible higher education options.
Thank you,

Joe

Lt. Governor Joe Garcia
Executive Director
