Governor Backs Return Of Presidential Primaries To Colorado Colorado Public Radio

On the heels of voters expressing frustration over this year's caucuses, Gov. John Hickenlooper says the state should move toward a primary system for presidential elections. The heads of both major political parties in the state have expressed similar positions. Democratic caucuses earlier this month were overcrowded and caught party organizers off guard. Voters reported long lines, and some were even turned away. There was enough of an uproar that Rick Palacio, chairman of the Colorado Democratic Party, offered his "sincerest apologies" to anyone who was turned away or gave up before they could cast a vote.

Colorado wants to regulate daily fantasy sports leagues - and they're OK with that

Denver Post

Colorado lawmakers are set to join about 30 legislatures looking to curtail, regulate or ban pay-for-play fantasy sports leagues.

A bipartisan bill introduced Thursday would create a Colorado Office of Fantasy Sports to draft rules that ensure the games are played fair and square and not as a front for illegal gambling.

And that sounds great to the Fantasy Trade Sports Association.

Regulation ensures consumer protections and bestows more legitimacy on games played by millions of Americans that have operated in a legal gray area.

Senator: provider fee should be enterprise

Pueblo Cheiftain

With the hospital provider fee all but off the budget radar for this year, state Sen. Larry Crowder, R-Alamosa, introduced legislation Monday to make the program an enterprise fund, exempting it from budget crunching and protecting it from the Taxpayer's Bill of Rights fiscal restraints.

An enterprise fund, such as Great Outdoors Colorado, the Colorado Lottery and the Colorado State Fair, stands separate from general fund calculations when it comes to TABOR. TABOR restricts state spending from going over a revenue and population model, unless there is a vote by the people to waive a refund.

"Hospitals can't simply stop treating people based on an inability to pay for care," Crowder said Monday. "In 1986, President Reagan signed the Emergency Medical Treatment and Active Labor Act into law. This act ensures hospitals must treat everyone who arrives in an emergency department, regardless of whether they have insurance or money to pay."

Tuesday's election covers pot, broadband... and single-file cycling

Denver Post

Seven more Colorado communities will ask voters Tuesday to approve the sale of recreational marijuana.

At the same time, Parachute residents will be asked to decide whether more than half the town board should be recalled over a decision last year to repeal a ban on marijuana establishments.

Those conflicting ballot measures are among dozens of issues that range from taxes, broadband Internet service and - wait for it - mandatory single-file cycling that face voters in 117 Colorado municipalities outside Denver on Tuesday.

Firefighters say they'd rather be in a burning building than I-70

9 News

Lake Dillon Fire Chief Jeff Berino says he gets nervous when his firefighters head out on Interstate 70 for accidents.

"I worry about my firefighters' safety on the interstate every day," he said.

Many firefighters say I-70 rollouts are the biggest threats to safety - in fact, Berino says many firefighters would "rather be inside a burning building" than on the highway.

Colorado marijuana sales project to hit $1.5 billion

KOAA News

Marijuana sales in Colorado grew by 93 percent last year and are expected to keep climbing. A report from the cannabis data analytics company New Frontier projects total medical and recreational marijuana sales will surpass $1.5 billion in 2016.

John Kagia, Director of Industry Analytics for New Frontier, said the state's population growth and strong demand from marijuana tourists contributed to the growth.

"It reflects just how strong of a demand for adult use marijuana has been in the state," Kagia said.
