Colorado lawmakers crafting massive spending overhaul in final days

Denver Post

Colorado's top lawmakers are negotiating a far-reaching measure in the final days of the legislative session that is designed to save hospitals from major budget cuts, generate $1.8 billion for road repairs and lower the state's spending cap.

Senate President Pro Tem Jerry Sonnenberg, R-Sterling, unveiled the details early Monday after days of closed-door negotiations with top Democratic lawmakers. But moments after he announced an agreement on the legislation, an aide passed him a note from Democrats that declared no deal.

Transportation tax hike proposal reaches end of the road in Colorado

Denver Post

A bipartisan measure backed by Colorado's top lawmakers to seek a sales tax hike for transportation reached the end of the road last Tuesday.

A state Senate panel defeated the proposal to inject $3.5 billion into improving the state's highways along party-lines with the three Republican members citing ideological opposition to increasing taxes.

The outcome became clear a week earlier when the Senate's bill sponsors hastily announced an impasse in the negotiations on the term's No. 1 priority, a major setback for legislative leaders and Gov. John Hickenlooper.

Construction defects homeowner consent bill breezes through Colorado House

Denver Post

A measure requiring that a majority of homeowners in a condo complex first approve a construction defects action against a builder - rather than just the association board - passed the Colorado House last Monday and now moves on to the Senate.

House Bill 1279 is one of a handful of bills introduced this legislative session designed to deal with the state's long-running defects issue. Its prospects for success look good given the strong bipartisan backing it received, including a vigorous and public hoorah from Gov. John Hickenlooper last week.

Denver Post

Look for more Colorado breweries to open taprooms under a bill moving toward the governor's desk.

Denver Post

Denver Mayor Michael Hancock on Monday ordered a city review into rampant fence-hopping, public pot-smoking and slow trash cleanup that left Civic Center in a "disrespectful state" during and after last week's 4/20 celebration.

Delivering his most forceful critique of the annual event, Hancock said the city's inquiry could yield penalties for organizers and affect how the event unfolds in future years.

Hickenlooper vetoes bill to extend tax credit on some cigar sales

Colorado Statesman

Gov. John Hickenlooper uncapped his veto pen for the first time this session to reject a bill that would extend a tax credit on cigars sold to out-of-state consumers, saying the credit hasn't generated enough economic activity to pay for even one job.

Senate Bill 139, would extend for three years a credit retailers have been able to claim since 2015 on the 40-percent excise tax paid on cigars and other non-cigarette tobacco products that are sold directly to customers outside Colorado. The Boulder-based Smoker Friendly company said it moved an online sales office from Nebraska to Colorado after the tax credit was established in 2015 and was supporting the extension.

Give us the news: Lynchpin hospital fee bill still under wraps

Colorado Statesman

Senate Bill 267 is the most-closely-watched bill in what remains of the legislative session, the subject of intense up-and-down negotiations. The bill is legislators best hope to refill hundreds of millions of dollars that the state budget as it stands would slash from hospital budgets and to dedicate some significant funds to transportation upgrades after a major transportation bill failed to pass this week.

The bill was laid over last week in the Appropriations committee after sponsor Jerry Sonnenberg, a Republican from Sterling, threatened to kill the bill out of frustration with the House Democratic leaders he was negotiating with. Hospitals in Sonnenberg's rural eastern plains district are underfunded as things stand, so the slated $500 million cut to the the state's hospitals would likely be devastating to health care and to the local health care industry his constituents depend upon.

The final Colorado budget bill is a little less grim than expected

Denver Post

Less than two weeks before the legislative term ends, Colorado budget writers reached a compromise last Thursday on a $26.8 billion spending bill that is a little less bleak than initially expected.

The much-contested measure still cuts payments to hospitals by $528 million when it takes effect July 1, but it restores $50 million to schools and adds $9.5 million in spending to connect rural areas to broadband internet service.

The General Assembly is expected to vote on the final budget Monday, weeks after discord about the hospital provider fee program stalled the bill and pushed it perilously close to the May 10 adjournment.

Open late: Denver OKs expanded hours for retail marijuana shops

Colorado Statesman

Denver officials gave retail marijuana dispensaries the OK to operate for an extra three hours in the evening - a measure that would bring hours for city retail cannabis shop hours in line with neighboring communities.

The City Council approved the bill 11-2 during a regular meeting April 24, which allows medical and/or recreational marijuana dispensaries to stay open until 10 p.m. instead of 7 p.m. The change is effective May 1.

DORA Executive Director Appoints State Bank Commissioner to Dual Role as Colorado Financial Services Commissioner

DENVER - Colorado Department of Regulatory Agencies (DORA) Executive Director Joe Neguse announced today that he has appointed State Bank Commissioner and Acting Financial Services Commissioner, Chris Myklebust, to officially serve as both the State Bank and Financial Services Commissioner.

In this dual role, Commissioner Myklebust will oversee two separate financial divisions at DORA - the Division of Banking and the Division of Financial Services.

The Division of Banking regulates the business of state chartered and/or licensed financial institutions, including state commercial banks, money transmitters and trust companies. The Division of Financial Services regulates state chartered credit unions and savings and loan associations, the administration and enforcement of the Savings and Loan Public Deposit Protection Act, and certain financial activities of state life care institutions.

"Chris understands the benefits that state-chartered banks and state-chartered credit unions bring to Colorado communities and our state's economy. He also brings exceptional vision, experience and commitment to his role as a Commissioner for these two financial divisions at DORA," said Neguse. "While these divisions will continue to be separate, the move to maximize Chris's experience by appointing him to the dual role creates more efficient oversight mechanisms for the needs of both divisions, eliminates administrative redundancies, and will save the state government and businesses significant costs as well."

Myklebust was appointed as Colorado's State Bank Commissioner in July 2015 after serving as the State Commissioner of Financial Services for nearly 10 years. He was re-appointed as Acting Commissioner of Financial Services in November 2016 after the current Commissioner, Patty Salazar, was appointed as DORA's Deputy Executive Director.

In this dual role, Myklebust has executive authority to ensure the safety of over $9.7 billion in deposits by 1.5 million consumers in Colorado's credit unions, savings and loan associations and life care institutions, and $50 billion in deposits in Colorado's commercial banks and trust companies.

As State Bank and Financial Services Commissioner, Myklebust negotiates solutions on complex policy and financial issues, as well as administers the enforcement of federal and Colorado laws, rules and regulations and compliance examinations for both divisions. He also manages relationships with a variety of stakeholders such as boards of directors, legislators, attorneys, federal regulatory agencies, consumers and industry associations.

"As both State Bank Commissioner and as the Acting Financial Services Commissioner, I have worked to build public trust through a sensible approach to regulation and by consistently pursuing excellence in our delivery of services to our stakeholders," noted Myklebust. "These two different divisions fulfill an important financial role in our state's economy, and as their director I'm very honored to serve the people of Colorado by maintaining this approach."
